BERMUDA: WORLD WAR ONE

NCOs and Officers of the BMA

Bermudian soldiers travelling by troopship to France
On November 11th 2018, countries throughout the world will celebrate the 100th anniversary of the end of World War One; also known as the Great War and The War to End all Wars.

This booklet will give a brief overview of World War One and list every Bermudian who served, including those who gave their lives in service, were wounded, listed as missing in action or taken prisoner. Perhaps a member of your family is recorded here.

You can also read the accolades by Commanding Officers. It is clear that the Bermudian soldiers performed their duties admirably in the face of continuous danger and hardship.

Please remember Bermuda’s War Veterans by wearing a poppy in November, and supporting the Island’s remaining World War 2 veterans and widows.
The story of Bermudians in World War One

The catastrophe of World War One erupted in 1914. Over 130 nations were involved in the course of the War. Of the 70 million men of all countries who served in the War, over 9 million died or were killed in active service; 3 million women became widows and 10 million children were left fatherless. Roughly 50 per cent of the men who served were captured, wounded or lost their lives as a result of war service.

The German ruler, Kaiser Wilhelm II was determined to expand Germany’s power and territories, even beyond Europe. He set out to expand the German army and create a navy to rival Britain.

The spark that ignited the War was the assassination of the heir to the throne of Austria and Hungary, Archduke Franz Ferdinand by a 19 year old Serbian student. Austria declared war on Serbia. As soon as armies mobilized, war was unavoidable. The Great War had begun, and the German army invaded Belgium and France in the Battle of the Frontiers on August 14th, 1914.

Britain declared war on Germany on August 4th 1914, and the armed forces in Bermuda were immediately put on war footing. In those days the units were segregated. The Bermuda Volunteer Rifle Corps (white) was mobilized, and the Bermuda Militia Artillery (coloured) was undergoing annual training camp. Both units spent several months on defence works with the Garrison at Dockyard, and in May 1915 the BVRC left for France, where they were attached to the Lincolnshire Regiment.

In May of 1916 the Bermuda Contingent Royal Garrison Artillery, formed from the Bermuda Militia Artillery, embarked for France under the command of white officers. These included the great grandfather of the present Anglican Bishop of Bermuda, Major Thomas Dill. He was at the time Commanding Officer of the Garrison at Dockyard. He gave up his command to a subordinate officer in order to serve in France with the BMA soldiers. They remembered him as a fine commander. After the war, he was awarded the OBE, and resumed his command at Dockyard, later becoming Bermuda’s Attorney General.

A recorded total of 544 Bermudians served in WW1. Of the 126 serving in the BVRC, 30 were killed in action, 7 wounded, 5 taken prisoner of war, and 2 never returned -missing in action. 252 soldiers served with the Bermuda Contingent, Royal Garrison Artillery. 2 were killed in action, 7 were taken prisoner of war, 19 died of disease or wounds and 1 was reported missing. Of the 167 Bermudians who joined the Allied Forces independently, 21 were killed in action, 8 were wounded, 2 became prisoners of war, and 1 was reported missing.

Both Contingents served in the battles of the Somme, Arras, Ypres and Vimy Ridge. The BMA were employed on extremely dangerous duties at heavy ammunition dumps, carrying ammunition to the front lines, frequently coming under enemy fire. Two members of the BMA were literally blown to bits when the ammunition they were carrying exploded.

A considerable number of Bermudians enlisted independently in the Allied forces, including English, Scottish, French and Canadian Regiments, the Royal Air Force, Royal Flying Corps, Royal Navy and US units. Bermudians served as far away as Serbia on the Eastern Front. Some enlisted in Canadian units, because they believed that they would be involved in the fiercest fighting. They were right.

Why did both black and white Bermudians volunteer to take part in a war that started thousands of miles away in distant Europe? In 1914, the British Empire was known as ‘the Empire on which the sun never set’. Citizens of the Empire felt an immense pride and duty to the Empire and to ‘King and Country.’ It was widely thought that the war would be very short – ‘over by Christmas’ – and the newly-attested soldiers had no idea of the horrors of mechanised warfare that awaited them, or the brutal conditions on the front lines. To them, the war was a glamorous, even a welcome opportunity – an unforeseen chance for glory and adventure, with the added incentive of returning to their home countries and families as heroes.

Moving to the front lines in France would have been a brutal experience for young soldiers, packed by the thousand into troopships during sea battles, scarcely able to move for the entire voyage and then finding themselves in battle conditions in France. Animals and men could be swallowed up completely in the thick mud of the battlefields.

The experience for the black soldiers from Bermuda was shocking; they were given the rank of ‘Gunner’ and expected to operate as far forward as no-man’s land, but they were given no weapons, as it was believed they might turn weapons on their white officers. This situation was finally remedied at the battle of Ypres, where black soldiers showed their mettle as machine gunners. The experience of black soldiers in other Allied units varied. Black soldiers experienced high levels of discrimination in the US forces and many black soldiers chose to enlist with the French forces, where they were treated as equals and had a formidable reputation as snipers and for patrolling behind enemy lines.

All who served on the battlefields of WW1 were awarded the War Medal and the Victory medal, but decorations are awarded for specific gallantry. Among the decorations awarded to Bermudians were the Belgian Croix de Guerre, the Military Medal, Meritorious Service Medal, OBE and MBE. There were at least two awards of the Distinguished Flying Cross to Bermudians.

Only ten years had passed since the Wright brothers’ first manned flight, but already warfare was moving to a revolutionary new dimension – the skies. The WW1 airplanes were single seater flimsy constructions - no wonder they were referred to as ‘kites’.* They were deliberately kept as simple to fly as possible, as there was very little time to train the pilots. At first, airplanes were used purely for reconnaissance; by going to the skies it was possible to see the enemies’ movements from a distance. Then, it was found possible for airplanes to drop bombs and grenades, and for ground troops to bring down airplanes with bullets and mortars. Aerial warfare between fliers started, and later airplanes were equipped with a forward mounted machine gun for the pilot to use. The French invented the term ‘Ace’ for a pilot who brought down five enemy aircraft during battles in the air. Bermudian Ace Lennock de Graaf Godet, who served in the Royal Flying Corps, brought down eight, guaranteeing the award of the Distinguished Flying Cross decoration. In June, 1918, Godet was killed when his airplane crashed in flames over France. He was twenty-one years old. Lt. ‘Joe’ Watlington also served in the Royal Flying Corps and received the same decoration. He lost his life when his plane crashed over France; his body was never recovered.

Undoubtedly, the worst conditions and the most danger was to be found in the front lines and the trenches. Conditions were so bad that it was necessary to rotate the troops in the front line trenches every few days. The trenches rapidly became toxic swamps, mud-filled and filthy; infestations by rats, fleas and lice tormented all the soldiers. Pneumonia and dysentery accounted for as many casualties as shells and bullets. Conditions were possibly worst in the battle of the Somme, which lasted 6 months and claimed one million lives to no particular advantage of either side. It was estimated that there were 11 casualties for every three feet of ground gained by either army. As the battles progressed, more and more soldiers were fed into the front lines by both sides; younger and younger German boys were conscripted as soldiers, and the requirements for Allied soldiers dropped drastically – the oldest British soldier killed was aged 68. US forces joined the Allies in 1917, feeding 2 million soldiers into the war effort despite their commander General Pershing’s serious concerns that many of his troops were barely trained and not ready for action.

For every four soldiers serving in the trenches, one would be killed, one would be unscathed and two would be wounded.

The Germans were the first to use poison gas as a weapon in 1915, but were followed quickly by the British. By the end of WWI there were 1.3 million casualties from chemical weapons.

In 1918, on the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month, an Armistice was signed which ended World War One with an Allied victory.

In 1919, Bermuda's soldiers returned home or were discharged to England. The British Government created compassionate Acts of Parliament for all Commonwealth countries, allotting returning veterans pensions, plots of land, free hospital treatment for life, pensions for widows and orphans, and monetary grants for a family homestead, for going into business and attending college. Unfortunately the Act was largely ignored in Bermuda. As to be expected, many Bermudian soldiers suffered terribly from the effects of their wartime service. Today we would call it Post Traumatic Stress Disorder, but in the aftermath of WWI it was little understood and dismissed as ‘shell shock.’ One Bermudian soldier returned home so devastated by his experiences that he never spoke again for the rest of his life.

After the War was over, great upheavals of society took place in many countries. The Russian Revolution of 1917-19 swept away Tsar Nicholas II, replacing monarchy and aristocracy with the world’s first Communist state.

As the Roman historian Tacitus wrote 2,000 years earlier: ‘They made a desert and they called it Peace.’
